The Existential Sand Tray - working with children & adults

The Centre for Existential Practice' is holding a one-day experiential workshop on using the sand tray as one approach to working with children and adults. Sand play therapy allows the client access to a wider, freer scope for imagination and self-expression. The experience captures both the client and therapist in the immediate moment, creating a canvas of the client's (and therapist's) relationships to themselves, to others and to the world. This workshop is open to anyone who wishes to learn more about sand play and how the process itself reveals the existential themes.

Odelia Carmon and Adam Mclean are the co-facilitators. Odelia has over 20 years experience working with children and using sand play as a medium for therapy. Adam teaches existential subjects and uses sand play in his personal work.
